Most of the cherry trees circling the Tidal Basin in Washington, D.C. should be in peak bloom at the end of March - early April - the time we will be there – according to the National Park Service. Come with us and see them bursting with pink and white blossoms. Most are descendants of those presented to our nation by Japan in 1912 to mark 60 years of friendly relations. The blossoms are greeted by the Japanese each year as a symbol of spring, as well as the fleeting nature of life. Note: Blossoms can vary according to the weather.
